

Membership Application

The Design History Society works internationally to promote and support the study and understanding of design history. Membership is open to all.

The Society undertakes a range of activities primarily to encourage and support design history research and scholarship but also to provide information, enable networking opportunities, foster student participation and public recognition, and facilitate regional links. These activities include publications, conferences, events, lectures, special projects, and writing awards.

The Society encourages liberal and inclusive definitions of design history and its methods, approaches and resources. In light of the interdisciplinary nature of the subject, the Society welcomes members from other disciplines such as anthropology, architecture and art history, business history, the history of science and technology, craft history, cultural studies, economic and social history, design and design management studies.
